FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

DATE: March 15, 2005

HEADLINE: Adobe Systems Incorporated and AST Corporation partner to deliver fast and cost-effective document delivery permitting secure sharing of enterprise data with people inside and outside the firewall.

Naperville, IL – Adobe System Incorporated and AST Corporation announced they are working together to deliver document delivery solutions enabling enterprises to replace inefficient, manual, paper-based processes with streamlined, automated processes that are available both internal and external users.

Based on the Adobe Intelligent Document Platform, organizations are enabled to use secure and reliable intelligent documents as the preferred format for employees, customers and partners to interact with enterprise applications at every step of the business process. With intelligent documents, enterprises can easily present personalized content, enable complex internal and external collaboration, capture the exchange of data and transactions between core applications and people or groups of people and archive information in standard Portable Document Format (PDF).

In partnering with Adobe Systems on the Intelligent Document Platform, AST Corporation provides design, implementation and training services allowing enterprises to solve four types of document-centric business challenges:

- Creating high-quality documents from enterprise applications or the desktop
- Streamlining collaborative processes
- Capturing data more efficiently from people inside and outside of the organization
- Automating and manage processes that are not managed by core systems
